R.E.A.L. Safety Tips For Female College Students: Staying Safe At All Times In Your College Life (R.E.A.L. Safety Tips Series Book 1) Larry Shealy BS MBA

What college students do, each and every day, puts them in dangerous places that the average person may not encounter each day. On a daily basis students are:

- Meeting and coming in close contact complete strangers, day in and day out...as you simply walk through campus and go to classes.
- Living in a 'cocoon' of sorts, as the Campus is in kind of a world of it's own.
- Meeting strangers at 'neutral' locations with little or no information on the person.
- Meeting new people from all over the country/world at parties, often times with massive doses of alcohol involved (a recipe for disaster!)
- The list goes on, and each example needs specific awareness and specific decisions on the spot, if something goes wrong in this environment.

Many days these students are so busy with classes, intramural activities, studying, on their cell phones or social media, with many other distractions throughout the day . This practice and pace can unknowingly become the recipe for a possible disaster, as believe it or not, the predatory types are watching and looking for opportunities. (The numbers of crime on college campuses continues to rise and we will look at the statistics in a later chapter)

EYE OPENER: Everyday life is dangerous for men and women alike, with one exception. If men were to encounter a crisis situation (an attack), the attacker typically wants either his money or his life.

If a woman encounters an attack by a man, the attacker wants her money, her body, her life.....or all of the above.

The stakes are high in both cases. The women have the variable of sexual assault to deal with. The difference between college students being attacked, and the average person being attacked is that the situation can be skewed, big time, in favor of the Predator when it comes to a college, especially girls, and here is why:

Predators are constantly looking for 'soft targets' or 'easy targets'

A soft target can present themselves to the predator in many ways:

- The insecure woman walking with her arms across her chest, slumped shoulders, looking down, moving slowly.
- The person on the cell phone, totally oblivious to their surroundings
- The person who gets in the car in the grocery store parking lot and sits and checks emails and texts, without locking their doors
- The young lady jogging alone.
- The girl sitting at a stop light, windows down, doors unlocked, music blaring...
- Fraternity parties with binge drinking, and upper classmen looking at the 'new crop' of Freshmen and Sophomore girls.
- This list is as endless, but I hope you see the point....

Predators study people. They study their habits. And they always choose the path of least resistance to abduct an easy or soft target, in a scenario with the least chance of being caught or injured.

Often times predators abduct their victim at one location (opportunity presents itself) and then they take the victim to a secondary location to beat, rape, and possibly murder them. They look for a victim (a soft target), and an opportunity to abduct or attack them. The predator looks for victims, and he looks for opportunities.....and when these three meet, a tragedy will occur!

In the case of college students, the barrier is lowered because of the dynamic I discussed above relative to the dynamics of campus. In these scenarios, opportunities for the Predator to find 'victims' are increased; because of the nature of college life, that we discussed in the bullet points above.

Unfortunately, we live in a world that has large doses of evil that we see and hear about on a daily basis on the news. In this book we will develop plans for female college students to be able to be prepared and aware to deal with the possible 'evils' that could make her a victim.
