Campbell, a man in his thirties questioning his contributions in this life has a meeting with an elderly James Conner. Conner takes him back to the early part of the 20th century telling of his youth in the Carolina's and at a Southern military academy. Later he reveals the difficulties he faced by crossing racial lines with his lifelong love, and his relationship with an aristocratic grandfather whose involvement with a secret organization that's sole purpose is wealth, power and keeping the dream of Southern independence alive. From the shadows the conspiracy broadens, and a split within the organization unveils a rogue group led by a rival family, the Whittington's, who threaten to unseat the Conner's and change history for us all. Compelled to know more Campbell becomes drawn into his story and eventually becomes part of it.
